

YouthInfo India

Fast, open access to data on India's youth

Features

- Easy, Interactive and easy-to-use dashboard
- Online database for storing, organizing and presenting data
- Data snapshots for quick overview of Youth data
- Key facts presented through data, analytical objects and graphics.
- Supports quick data sharing via email and social media

Benefits

- Gives insights to development professionals, planners and researchers
- Identifies areas of progress and disparity
- Evidence based decision based on latest data
- Helps in monitoring the situation of Youth
- Helps getting information out of data

Facts

Stakeholders	UNFPA
Geographic Area	India
Time Period	2016
Topics	Youth, Child Marriage, Women,
Tools	Online database, Profiles, Dashboards, Capacity development
Link	www.youthinfoindia.org
Reference	Sanjay Kumar, UNFPA India
Project Administrator	Samip Gupta sgupta@dataforall.org

Youthinfo India is a portal that provides exhaustive data on the young people of India. It supports the idea that the youth of India have special needs which need to be served by programmes and policies that are especially designed for them.

Youth comprise around 19% of India's population (Census 2011). This can be a tremendous advantage for the country if the young get the opportunities they need in terms of education, skill-building, jobs, health and family planning services, among other things, to maximize their life's potential. There is evidence to suggest that various aspects of young people's lives need attention. One in two young women marry before they are 18, and around 16% of them have a child or are pregnant before they turn 19. Young couple needs reproductive health and family planning services to ensure that pregnancies are planned and wanted.

Young people should be seen as a unique group whose issues need to be understood and addressed. This portal is aimed at drawing the attention of policy-makers, media, researchers, interested individuals and, of course, youth themselves towards the diverse aspects of their lives.